STANZAS TO A SISTER. BY LORD BYRON.

Though the day of my destiny 's o'er, And the star of my fate bath declined, Thy soft heart refused to discover The faults which so many could find; Though thy soul with my grief was acquainted, It shrouk not to share it with me, And the love which my spirit hath painted It never both found but in thre.

Then when nature around me is smilling Thu last smile which answers to mine, I do not believe it beguiting, Because it reminds me of thine; And when winds are at war with the ocean, And the breasts I believed in with me, If their billows excited an emotion, It is that they bear me from theo, Chough the rock of my last hope is shiver'd, And its fragments are sunk in the wave, Though I feel that my soul is deliver'd To pain-it shall not be a slave. There is many a pung to pursue me: They may crush, but they shall not contemn-They may torture, but shall not subdue me-'Tis of thee that I think -not of them.

Though human, thou didst not deceive me, Though woman, then didd not forsake, Though loved, thou forhorest to grieve me, Thot slandered, thou never couldst shake,-Though trusted, thou didn't not disclaim me-Though parted, it was not to fly. Though watchfor, it was not to defaue me, Normute, that the world might belie.

Yet I blame not the world nor despise it, Nor the war of the many with one-If my soul was not fitted to prize it, 'Twas folly not sonner to shun. And if dearly that error both cost me, And more than I once could foresce, have found that whatever it lost me, It could not deprive me of thee.

Thus neach, I at least may recall, It buth taught me that what I most cherish'd Deserved to be dearest of all: In the desert a fountain is springing. In the wide waste there still is a tree, And a bird in the solitude singing.
